

Betsy McCall goes to fairy-tale land

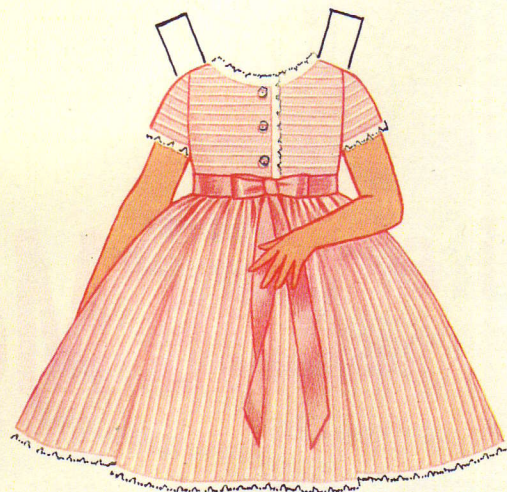

What would you say if I told you I had chocolate milk with Cinderella, and met Red Riding Hood and the Wicked Wolf, and shook hands with Snow White and with all of the Seven Dwarfs? Well, I did, and it was such fun. It was in Hollywood, and I was watching them make this new movie all about the Grimm brothers, who wrote the Grimm fairy tales. They were not REAL fairy-tale people—you know they couldn't be—but actors and actresses who played their parts. They all wrote their names in my autograph book, and I wrote mine in theirs. I went into the gingerbread house with Hansel and Gretel, and they gave me a bit of it to nibble, just as in the story. Oh, and I met this funny old man who was spinning straw into gold—YOU know who he was! And he said, "Little dame, little dame, see if you can guess my name." So I shouted, loud as anything, "Rumpelstiltskin!" just like the Queen in the fairy story. And the funny man was pleased, not at all like that real mean old Rumpelstiltskin.

Betsy's embroidered slip is almost too pretty to cover

She feels like a fairy-tale character in her red cotton

A real princess could wear this pink Fortrel nightgown
