

BETSY McCALL'S TRIP TO NEW YORK

On Washington's Birthday, we had a long, long weekend, so off we went to New York. There were so many things we wanted to do that Daddy said Washington should have had a birth week, not a birthday. We skated in Rockefeller Plaza and went to the Children's Zoo in Central Park. It's like a fairy tale come true, with cute little places to walk into and tiny bridges to walk over, all the right size for children. The animals were so friendly. It seemed as though all the boys and girls in Manhattan must have been there, it was so crowded. Later, I drank delicious hot chocolate, while the cup warmed my hands. Then all of us went to the Guggenheim Museum—it's round outside, and inside, too. And you don't walk up stairs; you walk round and round on a ramp—puff-puff-puff—till you reach the top. The pictures were interesting, I guess—at least, my mother thought so. But I liked the ramp BEST. I kept thinking what fun it would be to run all the way down in a great big swirl on a day when nobody else was there!

This blouse is trimmed with a design appliquéd to a strip of white piqué all down the front

Betsy got these three blouses for the trip. She loves this ruffled dotted one. Isn't it pretty?

She feels so important in this shirt with tucked front, tightly cuffed sleeves, and town collar
