

BETSY, LINDA, AND THE EASTER RABBIT

My little cousin Linda's kindergarten class has adopted an Easter bunny, just five weeks old. His name is Snow White, even though he is a boy bunny, because his coat is white as snow. He lives in a big pen that rests on a big table in the classroom. He has clean wood shavings on his floor and a dishful of water to drink. In the corner, there's the dearest little house, where he goes to be alone or to nap. Every day, the children feed him things he likes to eat, like lettuce, carrots, fruit, and rabbit pellets. It's Linda's job to take care of him weekends, when the school is closed, because she lives nearest the school. Her father has the key, and on Saturdays and Sundays, he and Linda carry food to him and give him fresh water. Sometimes I go with them. Oh, he is such a funny rabbit! You should see him take a carrot in his front paws and chomp-chomp-chomp, while he sits back on his hind legs. After Easter, guess what! Linda will get the bunny to keep, because she's been taking such good care of him.
