BETSY MEETS A FRIEND OF UNICEF

Last week our whole school dressed up in Halloween costumes and drove to the airport to welcome a friend of Unicef. I mean Danny Kaye. There were a zillion kids, dressed as clowns and ballerinas and stuff. Our class was the nearest to the gate, and the first thing Danny saw, as he raced down the steps waving his crazy mashed-down hat, was the banner that our class painted: "KIDS HELP UNICEF HELP KIDS." "Hey," he said, "that's more than smart. It's true! Do you know how much money your trick-or-treating raised last year? Three million dollars. If you took all the packages of food, and medicines, and books your money bought, it would make a road from you kids here all the way to sick and starving kids in Asia, Africa, India—and lots of other places. And you did it with your pennies and nickels and dimes." Golly, we felt proud! Can you imagine that even a penny to Unicef will buy food for a child? Danny said so, and we promised we'd go trick-or-treating again October 31. You, too?

Betsy loves her new fall outfit. And she says her angel costume is just heavenly!
