

If your school would like to have an Easter-egg project, maybe you'd like to hear about ours, because it was so funny and so wild. In a way, Daddy started it, the night his friend Mr. Eggleston came to dinner. With his smooth face and bald head he looks like a jolly, friendly EGG! At Easter time, he says he gets weary of egg jokes and presents of painted Easter eggs. "Golly," he said, "I'd put up a real prize if you kids could come up with some bright ideas." Daddy asked, "What kind of prize?" Eggie thought a moment. "Well, a sightseeing trip to Washington, D.C., all expenses paid, for the class with the best eggs!" Wowie! I loved the idea, Daddy and Mommy

EASTER EGGCITEMENT AT BETSY MCCALL'S SCHOOL

loved it and so did Dr. Broome, our principal, who suggested that each class select its own theme. Ours chose FAMOUS EGGHEADS, and you'll see some of them on this page. Last week every home in town was busy egging—Daddy said the sound of eggs being blown out was like a small hurricane, and Mommy said there should be a prize, too, for new ways to scramble eggs! Oh, and JOKES all over town: Our local paper called it "Egging Eggsperiment," and Daddy made me groan with, "The yolks on you!" There were so many super ideas that three classes got first prize. Mine, too! So there'll be three busloads going to Washington. And how does Mr. Eggleston feel? "Eggstatic!"
